Ottawa Bluesfest goes Gaga

Lineup announced.

Capital city's ultimate music event will have something for everyone, with acts as varied as Snoop Dogg, Zedd and Dr. Hook

 TREVOR GREENWAY
trevor.greenway@metronews.ca

Ottawa Bluesfest no longer has its "poker face" on after revealing its festival lineup Wednesday.

Organizers of Ottawa's premiere music event plan to announce Wednesday Lady Gaga, Queens of the Stone Age, Snoop Dogg and The Killers are among headliners at this year's fest.

But there is also a strong contingent of "throwback" bands that will grace the five stages spread out across LeBreton Flats Park this summer, newly reunited groups that will help the festival celebrate its 20th anniversary beginning July 3.

Ottawa Bluesfest executive director Mark Monahan said bands like Journey, Foreigner, Third Eye Blind, Collective Soul and Blondie are all invited to the birthday bash.

"We definitely wanted to bring in some classic rock bands for this year because it was the 20th," Monahan told Metro.

"We went out and tried to spread those throughout the event and tried to bring in acts that we haven't had before."

And although blues bands don't dominate the bill, Monahan says fans will have a good crop of acts to check out at this year's festival, with the likes of Gary Clark Jr., Joe Louis Walker and Little Freddie King ready to rip up the scale.

He says while the festival is still committed to having a strong blues presence, the appetite for the genre has decreased.

"These are fantastic bands, they aren't going to make huge headlines," he said.

It's part of Bluesfest's constant mission to cater the festival to everyone in the city.

There's a strong line-up of "niche" electronic dance music DJs including Montreal's Adventure Club, Halifax-based DJ/producer Ryan Hemsworth and German superstar DJ Zedd. There's also lots of hip hop, pop and country.

"If you are any kind of a music fan, there is going to be something to go and check out," added Monahan.

Director's cutMonahan's top picks

- Gary Clark Jr.
- Vintage Trouble
- Drive By Truckers
- Journey
- Foreigner
- July Talk
- Phantogram

"We have got Snoop Dogg, but for a different crowd, we are going to do The Mavericks, Dr. Hook and AWOLNATION."

This year's fest will also feature a new stage called the Entry Point, which will treat festival-goers to local live music while they wait in line for tickets.

Other acts include Tegan and Sara, Cypress Hill, Violent Femmes, Deltron 3030, Lady Antebellum and many more. For the full festival lineup, visit ottawabluesfest.ca.

Two accounts of fatal explosion don't line up

Eric Leighton. 'I'm just very sorry it happened this way,' teacher said at inquest

RONA WOODS
ottawa@metronews.ca

Two sides to the tragic story of Eric Leighton's death emerged from the coroner's inquest Tuesday, but they don't quite add up.

Scott Day was teaching the tech class in 2011 at Mother Teresa High School when an oil drum Leighton was converting into a barbecue exploded.

Day, who has not taught since, said the fateful barbecue project was an attempt to keep students interested. The first one they made was a success.

"They were proud of it," recalled Day.

He got 11 more oil drums that had been used for edible oil because they would be used in proximity to food.

"Safety was my number one priority."

Earlier in the day Ministry of Labour engineer Robert Molinas testified the explosion could have occurred because of the flammable degreaser Kleen-

Flo, which was used to wash the drum.

"(The students) had to report to me what they would do, step by step along the way," said Day, referring to the process.

"It was my understanding we were going to have a meeting before we cut the barrel to discuss options, perhaps using a hacksaw."

Adam Soliman, now a student at Algonquin College, was Leighton's project partner.

"We got everything we needed," he explained. "Grinding wheel, cutting blade, goggles and gloves ... We put up a tinted plastic screen."

Soliman said he thought

Day knew they were cutting the drum with a grinder.

"We weren't allowed to do anything unless he said so, so I assume he did."

Asked if he had heard Day give permission or Leighton ask Day if it was OK, he said he didn't remember.

He described how Leighton began using the grinder.

"I stepped back because of the sparks. I heard buckling, metal buckling and I turned around."

"It just exploded after that. My ears were ringing and it was blurry and dusty."

Day testified that when he heard the explosion he was moving a car for students to work on.

"There was a very loud explosion," he said.

"The log for that day flashed through my head to see if something could have caused that explosion."

Day described running into the tool room where he found Eric on the ground unconscious and the grinder plugged in and still running.

There was a heavy silence in the court while Day, struggling to collect himself, asked if he had anything to add.

"I'm just very sorry it happened, and that it happened this way."

NDP campaign launch. Former school trustee eyes Ottawa Centre seat

Jennifer McKenzie said she has knocked on more than 15,000 doors since she was nominated almost a year ago to run for the provincial NDP for Ottawa Centre.

And that's before her campaign launch on Wednesday.

With talk of a possible spring election, the school board trustee is ramping up what she calls "very traditional" campaign tactics.

"I think there's a lot of politically-motivated decision-making that's going on at Queen's Park and I think we need decisions that are in the best interests of the people of Ontario," said the 51-year-old, who cites poverty, social justice and fair property taxes as her election priorities.

An engineer by trade, she worked more than 20 years in Ottawa's high-tech industry before she became a stay-at-home mom to her three kids. Through them, she became involved in the Ottawa Carleton District School Board and was elected as a school trustee for the Kitchissippi and Somerset wards seven years ago.

She said she was motivated to run following what she calls the "harmful" decisions made at Queen's Park concerning education, including the controversial Bill 115, which imposed contract terms on teachers.

Liberal MPP Yasir Naqvi has held the Ottawa Centre seat since he was first elected in 2007.

McKenzie's provincial campaign launch will be March 26 at 6:30 p.m. at the Atomic Rooster, at 303 Bank St.

Ottawa confirms 4th measles case

Two more cases of measles have been confirmed by Ottawa Public Health after an un-immunized child and an immunized adult contracted the disease from a previous case.

It's the city's fourth confirmed case of measles since March 5.

The public health agency says the small spread of the disease is expected as measles is "a highly contagious respiratory disease where virtually all those who are not immune and come into contact with the virus will become infected."

The first case came from an un-immunized student who recently travelled to the Philippines.

Health officials are now warning people who may have visited infected locations across the city to contact their health-care provider if they are unsure about their immunization history. Go to metronews.ca for a full list of locations.

Local singer declares war on alcoholism

Move Like A Soldier.
Some of the proceeds from song sales going to Mothers Against Drunk Driving

TANYA KIRNISHNI
ottawa@metronews.ca

Ottawa singer Kristina Maria says she is using music to send out a positive message to her fans.

Her latest hit single, Move Like A Soldier, looks at the strength of love in overcoming drinking problems.

"I was watching a show about drinking and driving, and there were people getting hurt and dying, so when I walked into the studio I knew I wanted to do a song about it," says Maria.

The music video tells the story of a woman's boyfriend being in a dark place in his life and turning to drinking as she fights to break down the walls between them to bring him out of the dark.

"It's always about that one drink too much," says Maria, stating she is not embarrassed to call up her mom or friends if she needs a drive home after having had a few drinks.

Singing for a cause

"I was watching a show about drinking and driving, and there were people getting hurt and dying, so when I walked into the studio I knew I wanted to do a song about it."

Ottawa singer Kristina Maria, on the inspiration for her new song, Move Like A Soldier.

Album release

Kristina Maria's new album, featuring Move Like A Soldier, is set to be released in fall 2014.

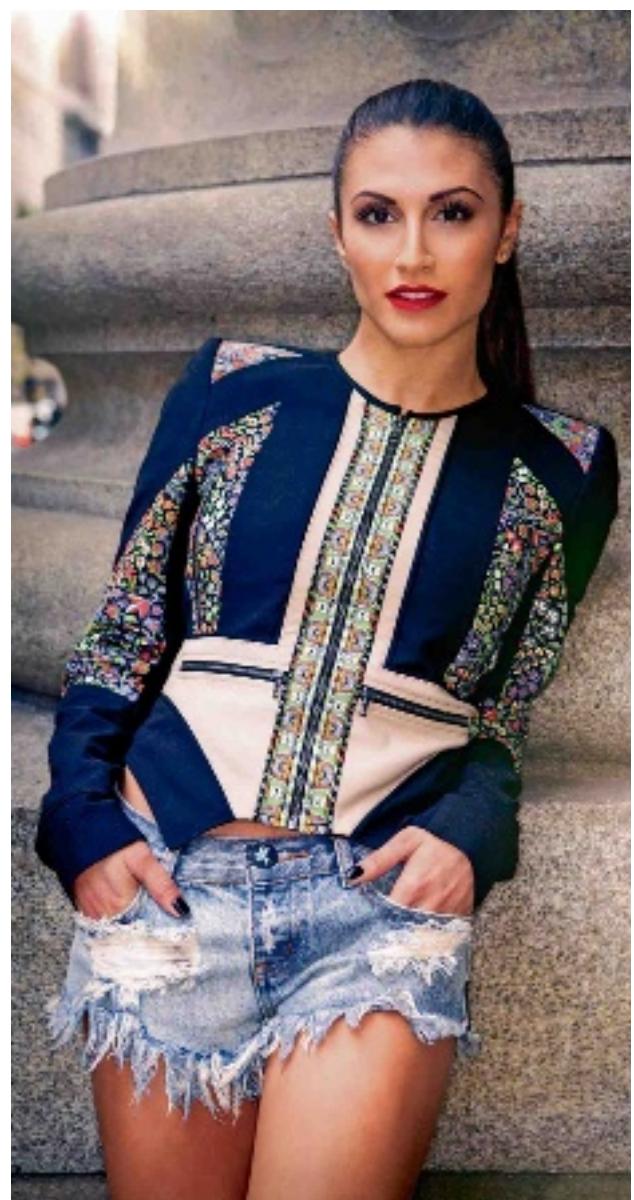

Part of the proceeds from the song will be going to the organization Mothers Against Drunk Driving.

Maria wanted to be a singer from a very young age and says it seemed like common sense because nothing else felt right.

"When I was four," she says, "I was watching the movie The Bodyguard and I turned to my mom and asked her to buy me the soundtrack — so there I was, this four-year-old bouncing around to Whitney Houston."

Maria's debut album, Tell the World, received a Juno nomination for Pop Album of the Year in 2012. Maria says that the success of the album is shared by her team of writers and producers, who she describes as being close, like a family.

"It's such a good feeling, not only as a singer but as a writer, to get this positive feedback — it's like a pat on the back," says Maria.

Kristina Maria says her latest single Move Like A Soldier is about the fight many people face in battling alcoholism. CONTRIBUTED

Putin bans Canadian group from Russia

Ottawa Centre MP Paul Dewar is cancelling his vacation plans to St. Petersburg, Russia.

The NDP critic on Foreign Affairs was among 13 Canadian lawmakers, activists and politicians banned from the country, as Russian President Vladimir Putin retaliates against sanctions placed against his country for the hostile takeover of Crimea.

Dewar joked Tuesday morning that he now has to change his vacation plans.

"I had no plans to go, but I do want to say that it's important to stay engaged diplomatically," said Dewar. "I would have loved to have gone to speak in Russia and put forward our point of view, but, alas, I won't be able to do that."

Dewar was banned along with Commons speaker Andrew Scheer, Government House leader Peter Van Loan, Conservative MPs Ted Opitz, Dean Allison and James Bezan, Conservative Sen. Raynell Andreychuk, Liberal MPs Irwin Cotler and Chrystia Freeland, assistant secretary to the cabinet Christine Hogan, national president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Paul Grod, clerk of the privy council Wayne Wouters and deputy secretary to the cabinet Jean-François Tremblay.

Dewar thinks he was banned because he was vocal in speaking out against Russia's anti-gay laws leading up to the Sochi Olympics and has been just as loud in criticizing the "illegal annexation of Ukraine."

"If Putin wants to ban me from travelling to Russia because I am standing on the side of supporting international law and for human rights, then so be it," he said. "I take it as a sign of being on the right side of history and doing the right thing."

Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird called the ban a "badge of honour" for the country.

"None of the people listed today is threatening the territorial integrity or sovereignty of the Russian federation," Baird said.

Dozens missing, deaths set to climb in Wash. mudslide

The search. Some crews had to pull back because of concern over potential flash floods or another landslide

The death toll of 14 from a massive Washington state mudslide is expected to increase as crews continue to search through the soupy, debris-laden field and rainy conditions complicate matters for searchers on the ground and in the air.

"We're expecting that number to go up throughout the day," Snohomish County Fire District 21 Chief Travis Hots said Tuesday.

Dozens of people remain unaccounted for. Authorities are working off a list of 176 potentially missing people, though many of those names likely are duplicates and they think that number will decrease.

Snohomish County emergency management director John Pennington said officials expect to have an updated list later Tuesday.

The landslide Saturday destroyed a small community 55 miles northeast of Seattle, flattening about two dozen homes and critically injuring several people.

From the beginning, rescue crews on the ground have faced dangerous and unpredictable conditions as they navigated quicksand-like mud that was 15 feet deep in some places. Some who went in got caught up to their armpits in the thick, sticky sludge.

A scientist who documented the landslide conditions on the hillside that buckled had warned in a 1999 report filed with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers of the "potential for a large catastrophic failure," The Seattle Times reported late Monday.

That report was written by geomorphologist Daniel J. Miller and his wife, Lynne Rodgers Miller. "We've known it would happen at some point," Daniel Miller told the newspaper.

Snohomish county executive John Lovick and public works director Steve Thomsen said Monday night they were not aware of the 1999 report. "A slide of this magnitude is very difficult to predict," Thomsen told The Times. "There was no indication, no indication at all."

Pennington said officials would examine the report, but he said local authorities were vigilant about warning of potential landslide dangers. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Birds of a feather say no to Winnipeg's weather

No spring ahead, fall back! About 200 geese that made their annual return north decided it was too cold and flew back the way they came

 SHANE GIBSON
Metro in Winnipeg

It's so cold in Winnipeg this spring even the geese are turning their feathers to our weather.

Ken Cudmore, of the FortWhyte Alive park and recreation facility, told Metro Tuesday a group of 200 or so Canada geese that had made their annual return to the centre last week took to the air and headed back the way they came just days after landing.

"I've been doing this for 30 years and I don't remember ever seeing anything like it," said Cudmore, FortWhyte's site and wildlife manager. "I couldn't imagine they went north, so I'm assuming they went back south."

Cudmore said geese normally follow the disappearing snowline on their annual migration north, and he thinks the few nice days we saw last week and a strong south wind might have tricked the birds into thinking it was nicer up this way than it turned out to be once they got here.

With temperatures dropping 10 and sometimes even closer to 20 degrees below the temperatures we can normally expect for this time of year, Cudmore said he doesn't blame the iconic birds one bit.

"Not at all," he laughed. "I'm thinking of joining them."

Ken Cudmore, site and wildlife manager of Winnipeg's FortWhyte Alive centre, says a group of 200 or so Canada geese that landed there last week have since headed back south because of the cold weather. CONTRIBUTED

Privacy. Device with data on 583,000 student loans left unsecured: Report

A portable hard drive containing personal information on more than half a million people who took out student loans was left unsecured for extended periods and lacked password protection and encryption, says the federal privacy czar.

Employees handling the device were not aware of the sensitivity of the information it contained, concludes the report from interim privacy commissioner Chantal Bernier.

Human Resources and Skills Development Canada acknowledged last year the drive held data on 583,000 Canada Student Loans Program borrowers from 2000 to 2006.

The missing files included student names, social insurance numbers, dates of birth, contact information and loan balances, as well as the personal contact information of 250 department employees.

Bernier's report, tabled in Parliament, says a gap between policies and practices at the department — now known as Employment and Social Development Canada — led to weaknesses in information management, physical security controls and employee awareness.

The commissioner found that department employees violated sections of the federal Privacy Act related to the use, disposal and disclosure of personal information.

Information security cannot be assured by having policies on paper — they must be put into practice every day, Bernier said.

The department has begun implementing her recommendations, she added. "We hope this investigation will prompt other federal departments and private-sector organizations to review their own privacy policies and practices."

"What I can tell you is this: we're obviously going to respect the decision," Harper told a news conference follow-

The Supreme Court concluded that Nadon, a semi-retired Federal Court of Ap-

The high court also says the government needs a constitutional amendment to change the criteria for judges on the top court.

The government expected the Supreme Court to find in its favour, because the possibility of a rejection had been characterized by the experts it consulted as "very hypothetical."

Nadon himself spoke up Tuesday, telling Global News in an interview that he was prepared for the court to rule either way.

"I've been living in limbo, you know, since October, so at least this has certainly ended the uncertainty," Nadon said.

Egyptian court holds new mass trial of Islamists

Troublesome. The trials have raised deep concerns among human rights activists

After a single session with no defence lawyers present, an Egyptian judge said Tuesday he will issue verdicts next month in a new mass trial of 683 suspected Islamists on charges of murder and attempted murder, a day after he sentenced hundreds to death in a similar trial that raised a storm of international criticism.

The mass trials have raised deep concerns among human rights activists over the lack of due process as Egyptian authorities push 'Defies logic'

- The U.S. State Department said it "defies logic" that so many defendants could have gotten a fair trial in two sessions.
- German Foreign Minister Frank-Walter Steinmeier called the verdicts "very alarming" and said "further mass trials must be suspended."

swift and heavy prosecutions in their crackdown against Islamists and the Muslim Brotherhood.

Some 16,000 have been arrested in the crackdown since the military's ouster of President Mohammed Morsi last summer.

Defence lawyers boycotted the trial that began Tuesday in the court in the city of Minya, south of Cairo, to protest the verdicts issued the day before in a separate trial.

Despite the lawyer boycott, presiding judge Said Youssef went ahead with the session, hearing testimony, in what the lawyers called a violation of the law.

After the 5-hour hearing, the judge announced that he would issue verdicts in the case at the next session, set for April 28, according to judicial and security officials who attended the sessions.

U.S. Supreme Court tackles religious rights of companies

The U.S. Supreme Court struggled Tuesday with the question of whether companies have religious rights, a case challenging President Barack and even whether a female worker could be forced to wear an all-covering burka.

The outcome could turn on the views of Justice Anthony Kennedy, often the decisive vote, as his eight colleagues appeared otherwise to divide along liberal and conservative lines.

Pilot ignored co-pilot's warning, report into Arctic crash reveals

First Air Flight 6550.

Crash at Resolute in August 2011 killed 8 passengers, 4 crew — three passengers miraculously survived

It took just 2-1/2 minutes for a combination of human and technical mistakes to turn a passenger and supply flight into a remote Arctic community from routine to calamitous.

A Transportation Safety Board report into the crash of First Air Flight 6550 blames an undetected autopilot change, a faulty compass reading and disagreement between the pilots about whether to abort the landing.

In cool, technical language the board's report provides a second-by-second breakdown of what probably happened in the cockpit as the pilots crashed the Boeing 737 into a hillside more than a kilometre from the runway.

Problems began because on-board compasses were incorrectly adjusted by 17 degrees. That error was compounded when the captain turned into the final approach and unwittingly changed the operational mode of the plane's autopilot. Busy with the landing checklist, in weather obscured by cloud, mist and light rain, neither he nor the co-pilot picked up the change.

Within seconds after that final turn, the co-pilot realized the plane was off course and repeatedly told the pilot, reminding him about the large hill to the right of the runway. The pilot replied that the autopilot was working fine.

Five seconds later, the co-pilot suggested they pull up and go around for another approach. The pilot, fully focused on landing the plane and on figuring out why his instruments were giving confusing readings, refused.

The plane smashed into the hill and broke into three main pieces. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Lawsuits

Several lawsuits filed over the disaster cast partial blame on the Canadian Forces, which had taken control over the airport on the day of the crash.

- The transportation board said the military's presence was not a contributing factor in the crash.
- The military had set up a temporary air traffic control tower to guide in all planes. The airport was normally an uncontrolled airspace and pilots navigated themselves onto the runway.
- The suits claim the military did not have enough people on duty to handle the air traffic.

Students holding out hope

MODJESKI
Metro in Saskatoon

Despite inadequate funding, limited access to technology and outdated learning materials, some students attending school on First Nations reserves are hopeful about their future.

One of them is Grade 9 student Payton Daniels. Sitting in the library of the Sturgeon Lake Central School on Saskatchewan's Sturgeon Lake First Nation, the 15-year-old fiddles with her hands as she talks about her future goals.

"I want to go to university and become a veterinarian," she says. "I think I can do that with the education here."

With Prince Albert only about 40 minutes away, a number of students have been leaving Sturgeon Lake for opportunities in the city. But that option doesn't interest her.

"Here, I can actually learn about ... my native culture," Daniels says. "Our generation, we lost a lot of our culture.... I really want to get my culture back, and I've started beading, and I'm trying to learn Cree again."

If she graduates, she'll be among the minority of on-reserve First Nations students.

"I want to go to university and become a veterinarian. I think I can do that with the education here."

A 2011 report from Canada's auditor general found the education gap between First Nations and the rest of the population is growing even wider — a trend the federal government is trying to reverse.

The almost $2 billion in promised funding is welcome news, but for many young people, like Grade 12 student Patrick Ermine, it will come too late.

"I'm actually known here at the school for being an artist, but there aren't any art classes," says Ermine, 18, who aspires to be a tattoo artist.

While Ermine and Daniels are hopeful about their future, Joanne Berg, a resource teacher at the school, remains worried that a lack of access to modern technology and resources will hurt students in the long run.

"When they choose to go off to university, and their profs are not looking at where they come from, they expect everybody to be able to go and research essays, and find their textbooks," she says.

"They just don't have that ability. We find the kids that are leaving and going off to university are coming back home because they don't know how to access those resources."

Upheaval is coming for First Nations schools. The federal government is planning to invest nearly $2 billion into the neglected system and give communities more control over their own education. Metro travelled to two on-reserve schools to document their condition, the details of the plan and why many people say the proposed changes may be their kids' last chance.

For administrators at on-reserve schools, every day is a juggling act.

"It's a constant struggle finding enough money for everything," says Pauline McKay, director and principal of the Sturgeon Lake Central School, which serves the Sturgeon Lake First Nation about 55 kilometres northwest of Prince Albert, Sask.

But many are optimistic that the years ahead will be different.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper is promising $1.9 billion over seven years in the First Nations Control of First Nations Education Act. The funding is set to kick in next year.

"We have one phys-ed teacher for all of our 500 kids," says McKay, providing an example of the chronic shortages. "There's always a lack of staff."

In most of the country, First Nations education is funded through the federal government, whereas mainstream public schools receive funding through the province.

McKay said that Sturgeon Lake gets $6,500 per student per year. By comparison, the provincial government provided more than $10,000 per student to public and Catholic divisions in the North Battleford, Sask., area, and around $17,000 to the French board, according to a 2013 study from educational consultant R. J. Kowalchuk.

That discrepancy results in fewer course offerings.

McKay envies how provincial schools are able to enjoy such luxuries as drama and music classes.

"For extras, we have phys-ed and we've got Cree," McKay says. "That's it."

All this hasn't stopped McKay and others at the school from trying to produce graduates out of children deprived of resources. McKay designed her own schedule so students can focus their efforts on one course at a time each month.

At James Smith Cree Nation, roughly 65 kilometres from Prince Albert, the situation is even worse.

Marlene Nicholls, principal of Bernard Constant Community School, says her administration ends up with just $4,340 per student. Staff can't even afford to call in sick.

"This year we weren't able to hire substitute teachers," she says.

During the five-plus years Nicholls has been with the school, she hasn't once been able to purchase a new vehicle. Luckily, she has a retention worker who can double as a mechanic.

"In the public school system, you have to have (your vehicles) inspected," she says. "We try our best to adhere to those rules and policies, but there's no money for that."

What Nicholls does have is a retention worker and a community liaison to keep tabs on troubled students.

"If a teacher says, 'This kid is missing,' then they go and find out what's happening," she says. "They also have some training in addictions."

less

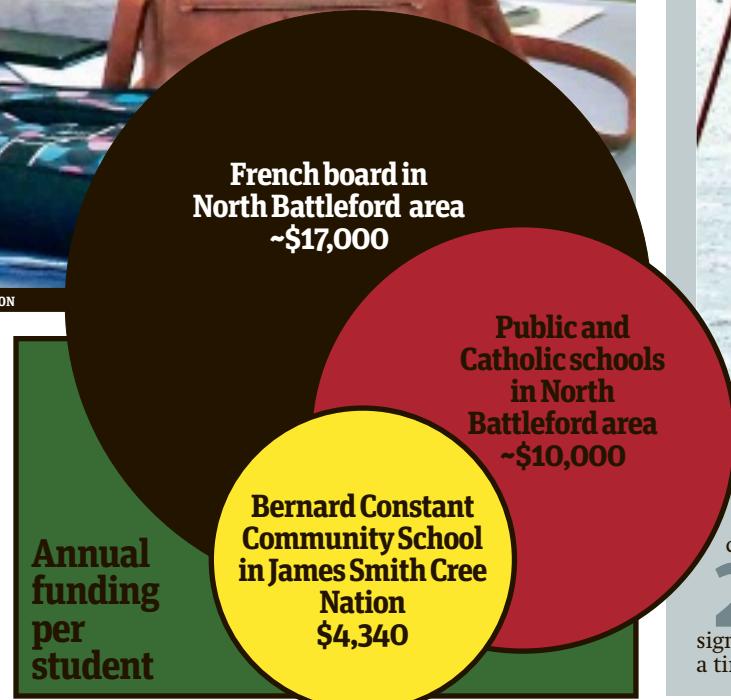

enough teachers. JACOB MORGAN/METRO IN SASKATOON

Each of these social workers earns only $19,000 a year.

The new Conservative initiative for First Nations education is expected to start injecting increased funding in 2015. So the question for those on the ground is not only whether it will be enough, but also whether it will be soon enough.

"I don't think people really believe what it's like in the reserve," McKay says.

Hope he's good with names ...

Sturgeon Lake Central has just one phys-ed teacher for its 500 students.

up the famed route pursued by explorers centuries ago.

She bluntly offered a list of concerns — including from insurance companies who, she said, are the ones really calling the shots about what ships would be allowed to pass through the area.

There are too many problems for now, including shallow passes and a lack of navigational markers, Raitt said. Any time savings offered by the shorter route would be negated if a ship got stuck, she added.

And then there's the frightening prospect of oil spills.

"I don't see it happening right now," Raitt said in a lengthy, freewheeling question-and-answer session at the Canadian American Business Council.

Nonetheless, the former head of the Toronto Port Authority said she remains enthusiastic about the possibility.

Air Canada's Rouge grows

Air Canada is trying to further cut costs by expanding its low-cost subsidiary Rouge in Western Canada and using it to replace its regular service on some U.S. routes from Vancouver and Calgary.

Air Canada said Tuesday that Rouge will begin daily flights at the end of April to Las Vegas from Calgary and Vancouver.

It will be followed with service to Los Angeles, San Francisco and Anchorage, Alaska, a key port for cruise ships. Seasonal service from Vancouver and Calgary to Phoenix will begin next December.

Air Canada chief commercial officer Ben Smith said the expansion of Rouge and the addition of new aircraft are a "key element of our strategy for sustainable, profitable growth at both airlines."

"Air Canada Rouge is best suited to compete more cost effectively in these markets where there is both a high leisure travel demand and low-cost competition," he stated in a news release.

The airline is using Rouge to lower costs by filling planes with more passengers and paying workers less than on the main network.

Smith said it may add other destinations to Rouge as Air Canada receives delivery of new airplanes allowing its existing Airbus A319s and Boeing 767s to be transferred to the low-cost subsidiary.

Air Canada also said Rouge will also take over service between Toronto and San Diego and Phoenix.

The Montreal-based airline is expecting to cut $100 million in costs — a 15 per cent reduction in costs per available seat mile — over five years by adding new Boeing 777s, 787 Dreamliners and expanding Rouge.

With 18 per cent more seats, lower wages, more flexible work rules and lower overhead, Rouge's narrowbody fleet is expected to operate 21 per cent cheaper than the same airplanes on the main network.

The advantage gained with the widebody 767s is even larger with a 25 per cent increase in seating to 264 passengers that lowers costs per available seat mile by 29 per cent.

Analyst David Tyerman of Canaccord Genuity said the expansion of Rouge in Western Canada is consistent with Air Canada's previously announced plans and efforts in Eastern Canada.

How to Sell Your Home Without an Agent and Save the Commission

Ottawa ON - If you've tried to sell your home yourself, you know that the minute you put the "For Sale by Owner" sign up, the phone will start to ring off the hook. Unfortunately, most calls aren't from prospective buyers, but rather from every real estate agent in town who will start to hound you for your listing.

Like other "For Sale by Owners", you'll be subjected to a hundred sales pitches from agents who will tell you how great they are and how you can't possibly sell your home by yourself. After all, without the proper information, selling a home isn't easy. Perhaps you've had your home on the market for several months with no offers from qualified buyers. This can be a very frustrating time, and many homeowners have given up their dreams of selling their homes themselves. But don't give up until you've read a new report entitled "Sell Your Own Home" which has been prepared especially for homesellers like you. You'll find that selling your home by yourself is entirely possible once you understand the process.

Inside this report, you'll find 10 inside tips to selling your home by yourself which will help you sell for the best price in the shortest amount of time. You'll find out what real estate agents don't want you to know.

Math problem!

Little Johnny has 37 candies and wants to divide them evenly among his five buddies, leaving an equal number for himself. How many candies does each of the boys get?

Answer: Little Johnny hasn't the faintest idea.

He and his friends take the "discovery" method of mathematics at school, where they don't learn the answer but are taught techniques for getting to the answer some day.

So they don't know much about division or fractions. Nor, for that matter, multiplication tables, adding and subtracting from columns of numbers or any of that other boring stuff.

Go figure.

If you don't learn the fundamentals of math, you're in over your head the moment you encounter algebra. And if you don't master algebra, the door is barred to careers in engineering, science, medicine, IT, etc.

JUST SAYIN'
Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

Math problem indeed!

I suppose you could get an English degree, but you'd have to learn how to spell. Although the way things are going these days, that may not be necessary.

This is not just idle speculation from the back-to-basics crowd. You know: those flinty fundamentalists who walked 10 kilometres to school uphill both ways in a snowstorm and liked it. Canadian math students have dropped out of the top 10 in international math scores. We're number 13!

And in the latest round of tests, only 16 per cent of Canadian students scored at "high achieving levels," compared to 30 per cent of Asian students.

That sound you hear? That's Canada's future going into the ditch on the road to progress.

Things are so bad even parents are starting to notice. The province of Alberta has drawn back from the "discovery" method after receiving a petition from more than 11,700 people who want their kids to be able to count. And Manitoba has reintroduced math drills back into the classroom, while trying to wean kids from kindergarten to Grade 3 off calculators. Ontario is sticking to the discovery course. Why fix it if it doesn't work in the first place?

Right now, you're probably going: "Who needs math?" Well, you do. Every day: at work, on the family finances, trying to convert U.S. gas prices to Canadian litres and dollars (which require advanced calculus), figuring out what to buy at the hardware store or how much to tip the waiter (although many restaurants are pleased to do the calculation for you).

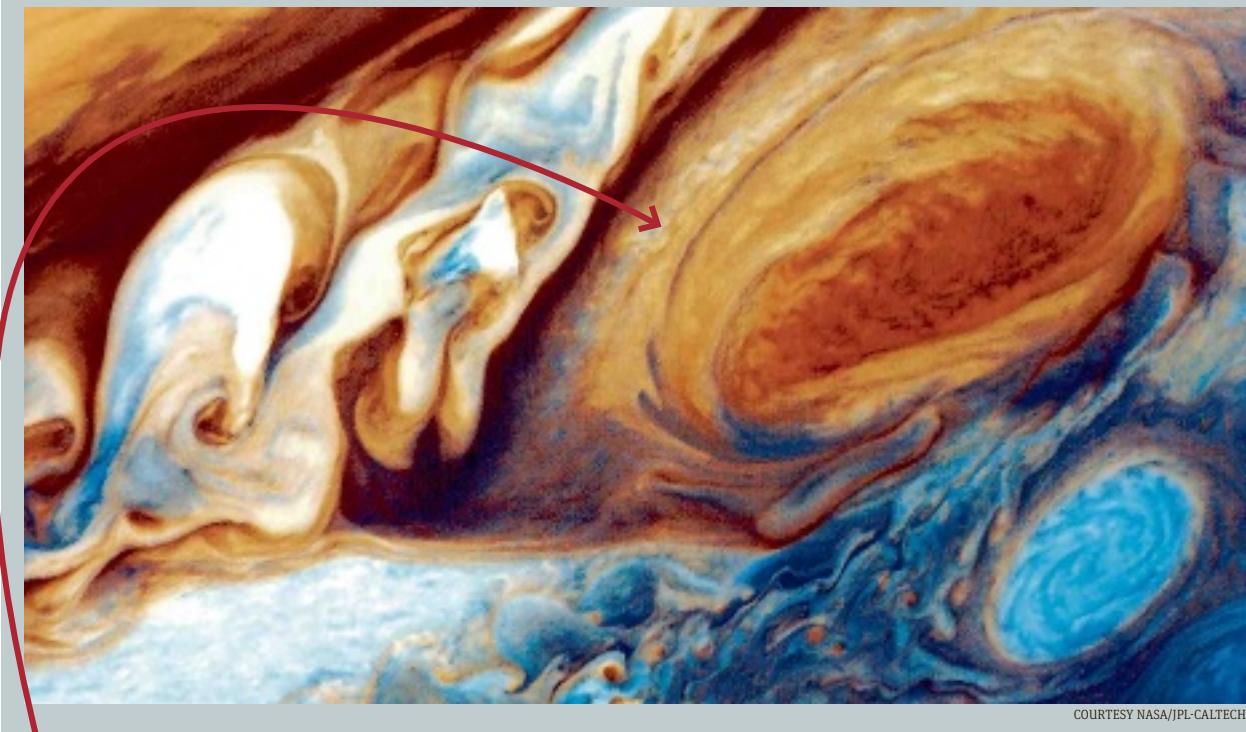

You're at the mercy of the bad old world unless you know how to figure, and for that you need multiplication tables or long division. And unless you do something and soon, your kids will suck at math even worse than you do.

Just think, if little Johnny knows how to divide, he'll successfully divvy up the candies into lots of six with one left over. And he gets to keep that one.

His friends can't count, so they'll never "discover" what he's done.

Crowe blockbuster latest in a flood of Noah movies

Story ark. Bible tale formerly featured in Disney films and doc

IN FOCUS

Richard Crouse

scene@metronews.ca

According to Genesis, God said to Noah, "I am going to put an end to all people, for the earth is filled with violence because of them."

Noah, a righteous man, was commanded to build an ark and stock it with "two of every kind of bird, of every kind of animal and of every kind of creature that moves along the ground will come to you to be kept alive."

For 40 days and 40 nights Noah, his family and precious cargo withstood a flood so severe it submerged the tops of mountains until "every living thing on the face of the earth was wiped out."

Once the flooding stopped and the Earth dried, God commanded Noah to come out of the ark and release the animals, "so they can multiply on the Earth and be fruitful and increase in number on it."

The story of Noah's ark and the flood is one of mankind's most famous tales and Hollywood has retold it a number of times.

This weekend Russell Crowe plays the title role in Noah, co-starring Jennifer Connelly, Anthony Hopkins and Emma Watson. Director Darren Aronofsky says he has been obsessed with the story since he was 13, calling it "the first apocalypse story." Nonetheless, he has added his own spin to the tale.

"When we first started working on the project, we were very clear not to have sandals and robes and long white beards," he told Rolling Stone. "The first thing I said to Russell Crowe was, 'I'll never shoot you on a houseboat with two giraffes standing behind you.'

More traditional are two Disney short films. Father Noah's Ark is a 1933 "Silly Symphony" for children that tells the narrative in song.

Lively animation shows how the animals may have helped build the ship and why skunks almost didn't make it on board.

In 1959 Disney released the twenty-minute Noah's Ark, their first stop-motion animated film. A jazzy score accompanies equally jazzy animation as pencils, pipe cleaners and other household items are inventively used to create the animals.

Wayne was a swimmer in the famous scene, and emerged unharmed, but others weren't so lucky. Three extras drowned and a dozen others suffered broken limbs.

Finally, a 1977 documentary claims to shed some light on the real story. In Search

Wahlberg and Bay transform franchise

Mark Wahlberg says Transformers: Age of Extinction "will be the biggest movie of 2014." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mark Wahlberg, star of the upcoming Transformers: Age of Extinction, is promising the fourth installment of the Michael Bay-directed franchise will be a huge hit.

"For moviegoers all over the world, I guarantee this will take it up a notch," Wahlberg said Monday at the annual movie theatre convention CinemaCon.

Paramount vice chairman Rob Moore said Bay was hesitant to return to the franchise until they were able to zero in on the right story and cast that would capture his imagination.

"Michael promised me it would be a very different, stand-alone movie, which it absolutely is," said Wahlberg. "It is bigger and better than the other three (films) combined. This will be the biggest movie of 2014."

In the action film, Wahlberg, who re-teams with Bay after last year's Pain and Gain, plays Cade Yeager, an automobile mechanic who discovers a rundown truck, which is really a transformer. Soon, he's the target of Autobots, Decepticons and the government.

With a series of Transformers films, which featured a consistent cast including Shia LaBeouf, Josh Duhamel and Tyrese Gibson, Wahlberg admitted he's feeling the pressure of stepping into the shoes of the other actors.

But he says he "had to jump at the opportunity because I really feel like it is probably the most iconic franchise in movie history."

White people, let's agree to be mature about this one.

Yes, that's Nick Cannon up there. Yes, he's donned what might be termed "whiteface." Yes, he adorned the Instagram pic with the caption, "It's official... So what led Mr. Mariah Carey to dress up as a ginger bro, looking like he's having the time of his life? He's promoting his upcoming album, White People Party Music. However, some of the Internet is writhing under the sting of what it perceives as Cannon's brutal racism. "Why is it considered humour when a black person paints their face white but when a white person paints their face black, it's racism? I don't care what justification anyone has for it. The action is still the same and people have the right to feel violated by @nickcannon actions," Instagram user c_n_v commented, adding, "The movie White Chicks was not meant to make fun of a race but instead two undercover cops doing their job."

All right, I may be in the minority on this one, but I think it's fine. Blackface is offensive because minstrel shows were part of the systematic oppression of African-Americans for hundreds of years. White people have never been systematically oppressed by black people. No, not even two days ago, when Nick Cannon dressed up as your cousin Colin.

The movie White Chicks, though, was a bridge too far.

For the thrill-seeker

Party every night with travellers from around the world at the Loki Hostel in Cusco city (beds from $8). Named after the Scandinavian god of mischief, this former Spanish colonial home fell into disrepair before four friends set out to turn it into the go-to social spot for fun-loving travellers looking to bond over copious amounts of alcohol. After sharing a row of fiery blood bombs — a shot of vodka mixed with grenadine, lit on fire and plunged into a half-glass of Red Bull — you may decide to head on a trek to Machu Picchu together. The hostel's most action-packed tour leaves you at Machu Picchu after four days of hiking, white-water rafting, mountain biking and zip-lining. Make sure to hike to the higher Huayna Picchu for a vertical climb that leads to a stunning view of the site. Before you leave Cusco, dine like a local at the San Pedro market. Expect to be pleasantly ignored and served authentic, inexpensive food, like barbecued guinea pig and alpaca. Try not to be too hungover when you pass the pungent entrails aisle. Visit lokihostel.com/cusco; also see the Loki Travel section of the site for tour information.

Maple syrup season offers sweet relief

So long winter!

Celebrate the change of season by tapping into Ontario's sticky stuff

STEVE GOW

Just as March is adored for the dawn of spring, it's also the month that maple trees in Ontario's sugar bush country begin to seep liquid gold.

The sugar season may be belated but you should still rush out and uncover these sweet stops on a maple syrup tour.

Learn to Camp. Parks Canada program aims to teach Canadians how to use their own backyard

ON THE MOVE

Loren Christie
life@metronews.ca

Spring is finally here and Parks Canada wants you to start planning a trip to its national parks and historic sites across the country. I chatted with Julie Lefebvre from the Visitor Experience Branch about the Learn to Camp program that's aiming to fill the parks this summer.

What is the Learn to Camp program?

We're organizing weekends to teach people the basics of camping. We're looking to help people who have no experience camping and don't know about our national parks or historic sites.

When they register we provide them with equipment such as a tent and sleeping pads through our partner Mountain Equipment Co-op. The Parks Canada and MEC staff run workshops through the weekend and teach them about how to set up a tent, cook around a camp and review all the equipment to bring. We even sing songs around the campfire. The idea is they get the skills to come on their own next time.

Where and when will these weekends be happening?
June 20 and 21 is the launch date and last Learn to Camp is end of September. There are about 20 places that are going to run the program across the country — mainly in national parks, but there are some historic sites as well.

A few places, like Rouge National Urban Park in Toronto, will do several Learn to Camp weekends throughout the summer but mainly it's once. Several locations will also provide buses from downtown locations to assist in getting everyone to the campsite.

How do people register?
They can call the Parks Canada call centre. You cannot do it online, but the website pc.gc.ca does contain all the information on dates and locations.

The registration opens on April 18. It is first come, first serve, so call as soon as it opens. Cost varies depending on location.

Is there a new program this summer?

Yes. Equipped Campsite. There are nine or 10 locations across the country including Banff National Park and Cape Breton Island that will be renting camping equipment. This is for people who don't have equipment and loved the Learn to Camp program in summers past. People who now feel confident to go on their own with their families.

Why are these programs so important?

They connect people with nature and give them a great opportunity to have a typical Canadian experience.

New York City. Architecture poses with fashion in Bill Cunningham exhibition

Bill Cunningham is a familiar presence on the social and fashion pages of The New York Times and the streets of New York City, riding a bicycle with a small camera bag strapped to his waist.

But long before his images of street fashion became a regular newspaper feature, Cunningham spent eight years, from 1968 to 1976, working on a whimsical photo essay of models in period costumes posing against historic sites of the same vintage.

Astride his bike, he searched secondhand shops for antique clothing and looked for architectural sites across the city to create the perfect tableaux, many of which featured his muse and fellow photographer, Editta Sherman.

The result was Facades, a book published in 1978.

Now, nearly all of the 88 gelatin silver prints from the series, which Cunningham donated to the New-York Historical Society, are featured in an exhibition there. Facades runs through June 15.

Photographer Bill Cunningham's muse, Editta Sherman, poses in front of the Associated Press Building at Rockefeller Center. NEW-YORK HISTORICAL SOCIETY

A former hat maker, Cunningham's models are featured in fantastical headdresses. In one composition, Sherman wears a fur pillbox that playfully mimics the spiral lines of Frank Lloyd Wright's Guggenheim Museum. In another, a large hat brimming with oversized feathers and flowers perched high on Sherman's head is used as a perfect counterpoint to the sculpture of Hercules, Minerva and Mercury on the clock atop Grand Central Terminal.

"I don't think he ever thought of it as a fashion project," said the show's curator, Valerie Paley. "It's more a social, architectural and fashion history of the city. ... He saw the grace of old architecture, the lines and the architectural integrity." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Have you got the job-hop jitters?

Don't fear the retry.

Skipping from position to position may not be as professionally sinful as it once seemed in a working culture that demands a variety of experience

Maybe you're trying to find your professional niche. Perhaps you get bored easily and like to constantly try your hand at new things.

It could be that you are multitalented, with many passions and diverse interests you're pursuing.

Whatever the reason, if you shift from job to job, trying on different positions and sampling a variety of industries, you may be sabotaging your hire-ability.

That is, unless you have a strategy to navigate your professional mobility through job transitions to leapfrog your career.

Job mobility

In a new study from The University of California at Berkeley, researchers found that freelancers who demonstrated a long-term commitment to one field were most likely to be hired.

After examining millions of candidate profiles on an online job site, Professor Ming D. Leung of the UC Berkeley Haas School of Business found that applicants whose work history demonstrated a number of similar positions were at a distinct advantage over the competition.

Time off, a freelance or volunteer gig, a new collaboration or professional development project — these seemingly sideways or random career shifts could be exactly the professional pivots required to reach your career goals. iSTOCK

On the other hand, Leung discovered that freelancers who remained in one position for a long time, or who took on various but dissimilar positions, were perceived as less attractive to employers on the site.

Put differently, this university study hints that trying on different jobs is preferable and may give you an edge, as long as you stick within a single field.

Planning ahead

Other experts and studies have confirmed that zig-zagging your way through a series of short-term assignments isn't detrimental to your overall career progress if you do it right. Thinking strategically, those short-term positions can actually help you develop transferable skills and demonstrate your professional flexibility and openness to change.

In fact, what may at first seem to be a step backward may actually be the key to fast-track your career progression.

Describing his own experience in Harvard Business Review, Alex McClung observed that, "the sideways moves accelerated my career by five years or more each time," concluding that "sideways always turns into a slingshot." Your career "needs to be horizontal" if you want to get ahead, HBR author Ron Ashkenas insists, because the talent most in demand today has the skills to collaborate — adding "value across" the board for very different stakeholders.

Where you come in

Contract gigs, side hustles, freelancing — all may appear as a series of horizontal moves

Direction of your dash

"Not everyone's path makes sense as a vertical trajectory," observes Robin Madell, and it's possible to "move up" by moving over, or even by stepping right off the ladder every once in awhile.

- If that idea appeals, consider managing your career more like a college professor does, suggests Bruce Kasanoff in Forbes. Academics often step up to serve a limited term in an administrative role before returning to their teaching and research. And every once in awhile it's time for a sabbatical — a chance to pursue a new project, collaborate, learn a new skill, recharge and refocus.

on a very long résumé. But working hard on this kind of career-in-progress can result in an impressive, broad and diverse project portfolio, and produce an extensive network of professional contacts. Those are two big pluses for you — especially if you think of yourself as a bit of a careerpreneur.

Don't get tied in knots for an interview

Hot under the collar. Ditch your necktie in favour of a professional bow tie

ELIAS
DA SILVA-POWELL
TalentEgg.ca

When you're starting out on a job search, it's important to dress the part — whether you're at a networking event, business lunch or your first entry level job.

Despite the wealth of sartorial advice out there, I've always been a little disappointed at the lack of attention paid to that oft-maligned necktie alternative: the bow tie.

A moment of full disclosure: I couldn't be more biased on this particular front. I've been wearing bow ties for years.

However, this affinity has given me some insight into the practical merits of an admittedly esoteric piece of neckwear.

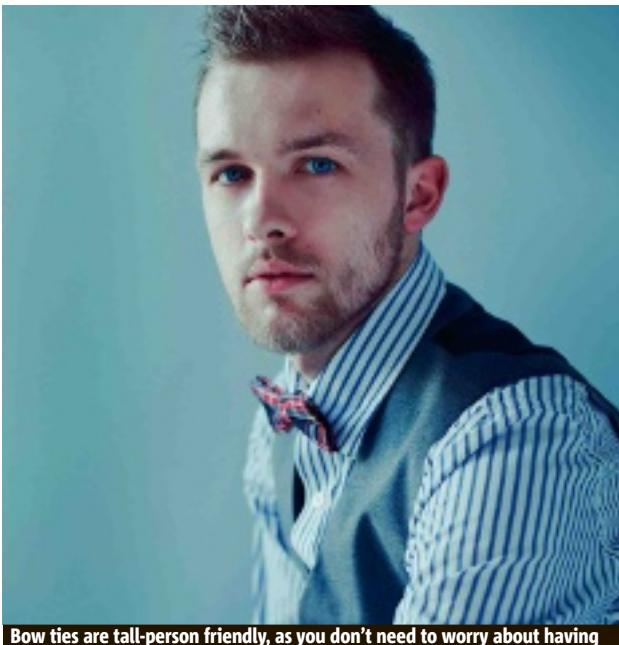

They're easy to tie (Part 1)
There's a popular misconception that a bow tie is a modern Gordian knot — when in fact tying a conventional necktie is much more complicated.

While most people learn to tie a tie one way and one way only, two Cambridge physicists have determined that the average tie can be knotted at least 85 different ways, 13 of which result in unique aesthetically pleasing knots.

By contrast, there's only one way to tie a bow tie — and the Internet is full of diagrams and videos that can teach you how.

They're easy to tie (Part 2)
Have you ever stood in front of your mirror, tying and re-tying a necktie, only to get the length wrong every time? Properly tied, a necktie is supposed to cover the entirety of your shirt placket, with the tip just grazing the top of your belt buckle.

It's hard to pull this off the first time, even after years of practice.

Bow ties are tall-person friendly, as you don't need to worry about having the right length of tie to work with. iSTOCK

This difficulty is greatly reduced with a bow tie. Less fabric to work with means you've got a good chance of getting it right the first time — plus, a bow-tie knot isn't supposed to be perfect (just a little asymmetrical).

They're easy to wear
Noted American designer and architect Charles Eames wore bow ties his entire life, supposedly because they kept out of his way while he worked at the drafting table.

If you regularly wear neckties, you'll know how many disastrous threats the average workplace offers your cravat. It can wind up dunked in your morning coffee, serving as an accidental serviette at lunch, snagged in a drawer... the list goes on.

The bow-tie gracefully avoids these potential pitfalls. Nestled snugly at collar level, it leaves you free to sup soup with reckless abandon — and it can't get snagged in a drawer unless you go into a filing cabinet face first.

They aren't as flashy as you think

"I couldn't get away with wearing that, everyone would stare at me."

I hear this a lot with respect to bow ties, often from friends who claim they admire my "courage." People are often afraid that they'll become an object of comment, or even ridicule, should they jump on the bowtie bandwagon.

The frank truth is that the average person — in your office, on the street — isn't really all that interested in what you're wearing. Sure, it's a bit of a rarity, but the odd funny look shouldn't be what deters you from trying new things.

After all, you'll never be able to find something that makes everyone happy.

If you work in a conservative industry, it's possible the bow tie might not be right for you. But if you're looking to express a little personal style and flair, it might just be time to jump on the bow-tie bandwagon.

Trading wisdom for selfless work

Coffee with an inspirational entrepreneur?

Website aims to exchange volunteer hours for meetings with major mentors

Ron Joyce, the co-founder of the Tim Hortons empire, isn't likely to take a meeting with just anyone.

But spend 20 hours doing volunteer work for a good cause and he'll sit down for a talk over a couple of double-doubles, no problem.

Joyce is among the big names who have donated some time to the new website Timeauction.org, where volunteers can sign up to be rewarded for their good deeds.

The website is run by David Wen, who organized an offline volunteer-for-prizes event while studying at Queen's University in Kingston, Ont., and set up another in Vancouver.

Believing the idea had big potential, he built a website to attract prospective volunteers across the country and managed to recruit some interesting people who agreed to offer their time as prizes.

"I figured, wouldn't it be cool if we were able to auction off (the opportunity) to meet cool people or get great experiences," Wen says.

So far, volunteers can donate their time in exchange for meetings with CBC design gurus Steven and Chris, Toronto Star editor-in-chief Michael Cooke, co-anchor of the BNN show The Street Pamela Ritchie, Reddit co-founder Steve Huffman, and a number of other well-connected professionals.

Each meeting has a preset number of volunteer hours needed to be claimed and they're handed out on a first come, first served basis.

Wen says he considered awarding the meetings to the highest bidders but had some concerns with that approach after running his offline events.

"What we started to find was that people may bid above their capabilities and it's a real stretch for them to complete the hours, so what we wanted to move towards was having more people win with (fewer) hours," he says.

"We were also finding that people who were bidding 50 or 60 hours were the ones who had a lot of time and probably were already volunteering anyway, where we want to target people who maybe it's the first time they're volunteering and we get them hooked on giving back to the community."

Developers are doing it their way

This is not a game.

For indie video game creators, standing out from the crowd is a difficult mission

They do it inside their hotel rooms. Or in front of everyone across a cavernous convention hall. They even try it out on street corners. In almost every spot imaginable at last week's Game Developers Conference in San Francisco, there were indie game makers touting their latest creations in the hope of becoming the next Minecraft or Gone Home.

The biggest challenge facing the growing number of independent video game creators — those risk-taking tinkerers who self-publish their own quirky titles — isn't making, distributing or even funding their creative visions. It's persuading people to buy their games.

"There's just something about human interaction,"

Game developer Aaron Taecker-Wyss, left, watches his developing partner Gabriel Cuzzillo, centre, play the game Tetropolis at the Game Developers Conference 2014 in San Francisco. said Chris McQuinn, a designer at Toronto-based indie developer DrinkBox Studios.

"The ultimate goal is to meet someone who might champion your game — a fan who will go off and tell their friends about it. There's no more powerful message about a game than when it comes from a fan."

McQuinn attributed much of the success of DrinkBox's zany Mexican-themed platformer Guacamelee! to the gamers the studio befriended at various gatherings like the Game Developers Conference (GDC) and the fan-focused Penny Arcade Expo. It's one of several grassroots tactics that indie game makers are employing to stir up hype.

The majority of developers at GDC, the largest annual gathering of the gaming industry in the U.S. outside of the Electronic Entertainment Expo in Los Angeles, are now classifying themselves as indie.

In a poll conducted by GDC organizers of 2,600 attendees at last year's show, 64 per cent said they were self-publishing on their current projects.

Advancements like crowdfunding, easier-to-use development tools and digital distribution services have made way for a swarm of indie creators crafting content mostly for PCs and mobile devices. However, there are only so many flowers to pollinate. For every hit like Journey, there are dozens of games that don't get any buzz.

ers to independently publish games for its Xbox One console. "We've already solved a lot of problems in terms of creating games and distributing games."

Ultimately, an indie's success comes down to the same query vexing all forms of entertainment: Is it any good?

"It's tough," said Jun Iwasaki, president of Puzzle & Dragons publisher GungHo Online Entertainment America Inc., who was meeting with prospective developers at the nearby Game Connection conference. "The most important thing is the first 10 minutes of a game. If I want to keep playing, those are the games I want to work on."

A match made in meat heaven

Bacon-Wrapped Meatloaf. The smoky undertones of the bacon make a mouth-watering addition to this classic dish

From your fridge to your table in 30 minutes or less

Frying up bacon and enjoying it on its own is wonderful. Adding it to soups, salads and sandwiches is also a great way to enjoy its flavour.

I decided to make my son's favourite meal (meatloaf) and one of his favourite meats (bacon), and put them together. When I excitedly told him that I combined his two favourites and that it would be amazing, he just looked at me and asked, "Why didn't you just make regular meatloaf?"

He was pleasantly surprised to taste the dish, with the bacon flavour adding smokiness and a delicious crisp texture to the meatloaf.

Truly, this was to be a perfect match!

A side of creamy mashed potatoes to go alongside each slice of this free-form meatloaf made for a lip-smacking dinner.

This recipe really should serve eight. It served five of us with a few slices for leftovers. Tucked into a soft kaiser bun and warmed through with a sprinkling of cheese, those leftovers made lunch delectable the next day.

1. In a nonstick skillet, heat oil over medium heat and cook leek, garlic, thyme and pepper, stirring for about eight minutes or until softened. Scrape into large bowl; let cool slightly.

2. Stir in eggs until combined. Add bread crumbs, cheese, milk, ketchup and Worcestershire; stir until well combined. Add veal and pork and using hands mix well until thoroughly combined.

3. On a parchment paper lined baking sheet shape mixture into a 9 x 5 inch (23 x 13 cm) loaf. Lay bacon slices on a diagonal across the meatloaf, trimming strips as necessary to cover the top and sides completely.

4. Bake in 375 F (190 C) oven for about 1 hour and 10 minutes or until meat thermometer inserted in centre reaches 160 F (70 C).

5. Let stand for 5 minutes before slicing into about 1-inch (2.5 cm) slices.

This recipe makes eight servings. EMILY RICHARDS

I do so like green potatoes

These crispy roasted potatoes are crunchy on the outside and soft and silky inside.

The sauce is a simple uncoked sauce made from fresh green herbs, spices, garlic, shallots, lemon juice and olive oil. The hot roasted potatoes absorb all the flavours of the fresh herbs and the touch of lemon juice balances the starch, making for a light and refreshing potato side dish similar to a hot potato salad. And, they look great on the plate!

1. Heat the oven to 350 F.

Ingredients

• 24 small red potatoes, halved	• 3 to 5 cloves garlic, minced
• 2 tbsp olive oil	• 1 tsp kosher salt
• 1 tsp kosher salt	• 1/2 tsp ground black pepper
	• 1/2 tsp red pepper flakes
	• 2 minced shallot or onion
	• 3/4 cup olive oil
	• 1/4 cup lemon juice

2. Place potatoes in a large bowl. Drizzle with olive oil and toss to coat. Sprinkle with salt and toss again to coat evenly.

3. Set wire rack over a rimmed baking sheet and place the potatoes on the rack. Cook 50 minutes, or until the potato skins are lightly puffed and insides are tender. You do not need to turn the poto-toes during cooking.

4. Meanwhile, prepare sauce. In a blender or food processor, combine all ingredients and pulse until chopped well, but not liquefied.

5. As soon as potatoes are done, transfer to large serving bowl. Drizzle sauce, about 1/4 cup at a time, over potatoes and toss well to coat. You may have sauce left over. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS/ ELIZABETH KARMEL AUTHOR OF SOAKED, SLATHERED AND SEASONED.

Curling. Longtime member of Ottawa rink will move to Sweden following the Players' Championship

Rachel Homan's champion curling rink will have a different look next season.

Longtime second Alison Kreviazuk is leaving the Homan team next month after deciding to move to Sweden to be with her boyfriend. Joanne Courtney of Val Sweeting's rink will join Homan, lead Lisa Weagle and third Emma Miskew next season.

Kreviazuk will close out her 13-year run with Homan at the April 15-20 season-ending Grand Slam Players' Championship in Summerside, P.E.I.

"It's been something that I've been considering for a while," Kreviazuk said Tuesday in an interview from Ottawa. "But I gave my team the heads-up a couple months ago and just gave them the idea that this was something I was thinking of, so they may want to consider their options."

The announcement was made two days after the Homan rink won silver at the world championship in Saint John, N.B. The Canadian side dropped a 9-5 decision to Switzerland's Binia Feltscher in the gold-medal game at Harbour Station.

"It definitely didn't affect our performance," Homan said. "If anything, we wanted it that much more."

The Ottawa-based team won the Scotties Tournament of Hearts for the first time last year and went on to win bronze at the 2013 world championship in Riga, Latvia. Kreviazuk has spent the last decade curling with Homan and Miskew while Weagle joined the team four years ago.

Baylor beast built under the radar

Cory Jefferson figures not too many people really know just how good Baylor has been in post-season play.

Not even the senior forward had put into perspective what the Bears have done until asked this week about their 17-3 post-season record over the past six seasons, which now includes a third NCAA Sweet 16 appearance.

"I'd say it's a very low percentage, considering I didn't even know about the 17-3 until just now," Jefferson said. "It's not really something that I kept up with, but that sounds like a pretty good record to me."

That is an .850 post-season winning percentage, better than any other Division I team with multiple NCAA appearances in that six-season span. Before those three NCAA tournaments in five years, the Bears made it to an NIT championship game at Madison Square Garden in 2009 — then won that title last season.

"I think it says that we can compete at a high level, and against the best, and we're one of the best," said Scott

Drew, Baylor's winningest coach with 204 wins in his 11 seasons.

Baylor (26-11), the No. 6 seed in the West Regional, plays No. 2 seed Wisconsin (28-7) on Thursday in Anaheim, Calif.

The Bears also made it to NCAA regional semifinal games in 2010 and 2012, winning both before losing in the regional final each time to the eventual national champ.

McGill lineman itching for big day

Football.

Duvernay-Tardif anxious to complete his pro day workout

Laurent Duvernay-Tardif can't wait to strut his stuff Thursday.

The McGill Redmen offensive lineman will hold a private workout in Montreal for NFL and CFL scouts. And after spending much of the last four months preparing for the audition, the six-foot-five, 315-pound tackle is ready for it to finally happen.

"I don't know if I should say this, but I just want to do it and be done with it," he said with a chuckle Tuesday via telephone.

"I've been training since December for this ... for me, it's been so long."

"I felt a little stressed last weekend but I went on the field (Monday) where I'm going to hold my pro day and ran some very good times in my shuttle and three-cone so I think I'm ready."

The 23-year-old med student is taking a rather philosophical approach to dealing with the stress ahead.

"Nerves and pressure can help so much with your adrenalin," he said. "You just have to control that."

Duvernay-Tardif was able to control being well-rested and fresh for his workout. To ensure that, he took half of last week and all of this one off from his duties working the night shift at a Montreal hospital, excepting to return either Sunday or Monday.

The native of St. Hilaire, Que., finished the season as the top-ranked prospect for this year's CFL draft, slated for May 13. But Duvernay-Tardif has also drawn plenty NFL interest

Not bad, considering Duvernay-Tardif began his college career as a 253-pound defensive lineman and only switched to offence in 2011. McGill also accommodated his heavy academic workload by reducing his practice commitments during football season.

But that didn't stop Duvernay-Tardif from twice earning All-Canadian honours and capturing the 2013 Metras trophy as Canadian university football's top lineman. He was invited to participate in last weekend's CFL combine in Toronto but opted instead to focus on his pro day.

It's unclear how many scouts will attend Duvernay-Tardif's workout. Both the Arizona Cardinals and Buffalo Bills have said publicly they'll be there, but some CFL teams are expected to take a miss because Duvernay-Tardif is likely to be go in the NFL draft and start his pro career there.

Regardless, Duvernay-Tardif's people are erring on the side of caution.

"We agreed to prepare food for 50 people, I don't know what that means," Duvernay-Tardif said. "I've been told if we had 15 (NFL scouts) we'd be super happy and if we had 20, that would be incredible."

Oh Man, City run that town

Edin Dzeko of Manchester City, centre, scores his second goal against Manchester United during their English Premier League soccer match at Old Trafford Stadium. Dzeko scored his first of the match inside 43 seconds and Yaya Toure added a third goal in the 90th minute to seal United's second humiliating 3-0 loss to a fierce rival at Old Trafford in 10 days, following its humbling by Liverpool. The champions are guaranteed to finish with their lowest points haul in the Premier League era and jeopardized their hopes of even qualifying for next season's Europa League.

City, which has two games in hand over Chelsea, has removed supposedly one of its toughest fixtures in a run-in that also includes matches at title rivals Arsenal and Liverpool. In truth, though, it will go down as one of its most routine wins of the campaign, with United outclassed from the first whistle.

Get ready to go in the tough Tahoe

- Engines (hp). 5.3-litre OHV V8 (355)
- Transmissions. Six-speed automatic
- Base price (incl. destination). $50,800

Fuel economy

Despite a 45-kilogram drop in weight and improved aerodynamics, the Tahoe rates 14.9 l/100 km in the city and 10.1 on the highway, compared to a slightly better 14.3/9.4 rating for the 2014 model's 5.3 V8.

Design

The shape is sleeker, there's less weight and more available safety content on tap. However the powertrain is a bit harder on gas. The trimmer sheet metal and stylish grille create the impression that the Tahoe is a bit smaller than before, but the tape measure proves that not much has really changed.

Review. It might be an SUV but it makes no apologies about being hardy and capable

wheelbasemedia.com

Honestly, when was the last time you heard the term "sport utility vehicle" bandied about? It likely has been a while, since not many are being made anymore. Still, there are a few hanging on, including the full-size Tahoe and its super-size Suburban relation.

Hanging on? Actually, these rigs, with their ball-team seating capacities, are thriving where others have faded from sight or have been converted to gentler, more fuel-frugal car-based wagons. North American Tahoe/Suburban sales climbed more than 15 per cent for the 2013 model year and, according to General Motors, represented nearly half of all full-size sport utility vehicles sold. Add in healthy sales of the similar GMC Yukon and there's little left for the few remaining competitors. The 2015 Tahoe, arriving this spring, has undergone a complete transformation. What is clear is the separation between the Tahoe and the considerably bolder looking 2015 Yukon counterpart.

It's a different story on the inside where max stowage volume has actually decreased slightly, possibly because the third-row seats now fold flat for added capacity and are no longer removable. Other changes include a more fashionable dashboard and control panel, complete with a five- or available eight-inch touchscreens that control the infotainment and communications systems. A smaller secondary screen is located between the watch-style dash gauges that displays key info where the driver can easily view it.

The filing-cabinet-sized centre console can swallow a laptop computer and other bulky items. There are also storage areas beneath the door armrests plus a secure spot behind the touchscreen for holding cell phones and other small valuables. The Tahoe's body is attached to a stronger ladder frame that widens the distance between the wheels slightly for greater stability.

Mounted between the rails is a 5.3-litre V8 that produces 355 horsepower and healthy 383 pound-feet of torque. Although displacement is the same as the previous base V8, the new 5.3 is all-aluminum and employs direct-injection (fuel force-fed into the cylinders under high pressure) and continuously variable valve timing (alters valve lift/duration to improve performance and economy).

The engine can also run on four cylinders under steady-state cruising, which also saves gas. The transmission is a six-speed automatic with steering-wheel "TapShift" controls and a Tow/Haul mode that holds the gear changes longer when trailering heavy loads (up to 3,640 kilograms). There's also Auto Grade Braking, which downshifts the transmission to help slow the Tahoe when descending a hill. This helps maintain vehicle control while ensuring the brakes don't overheat.

As per the 2014 version, the 2015 Tahoe is offered in LS, LT and LTZ flavours. Base models come with plenty of standard gear, with the mid- and top-grade trims piling on content such as keyless push-button entry, power-folding rear seat and start, magnetic ride control that constantly adjusts the dampers for a smoother ride.

Eighteen-inch wheels are standard with 20- and 22-inchers available at extra cost. On the safety front, along with the latest in crash-avoiding technologies, there's an available front-seat centre air bag.

It deploys (from the right side of the driver's seat) to prevent passengers from colliding with each other during a side impact. This key piece of technology addresses a weakness in current shoulder belt design that allows passengers to move sideways. Look for broader use of this in more vehicles. With a $50,800 starting price ($3,300 extra for four-wheel-drive), including destination charges, the new Tahoe continues a tradition of capability and power. Even in this day and age, it makes no apologies for that, nor should it.

Great Scotti! That's one hell of a car collection

Enforced auction.

In true collector spirit, John Scotti kept acquiring muscle cars and late model exotics, and didn't worry too much about the accumulation.

But now he's forced to — The Montreal-based collector, who also operates several new-car dealerships, has to relocate his Lamborghini and Lotus operations, which also houses a good chunk of his collection, and the new digs just can't take all the 'Vettes, Mustangs, Cudas, and Torinos.

So he's sending 400 to 450 of them to auction.

The "John Scotti Collection" will headline Auctions

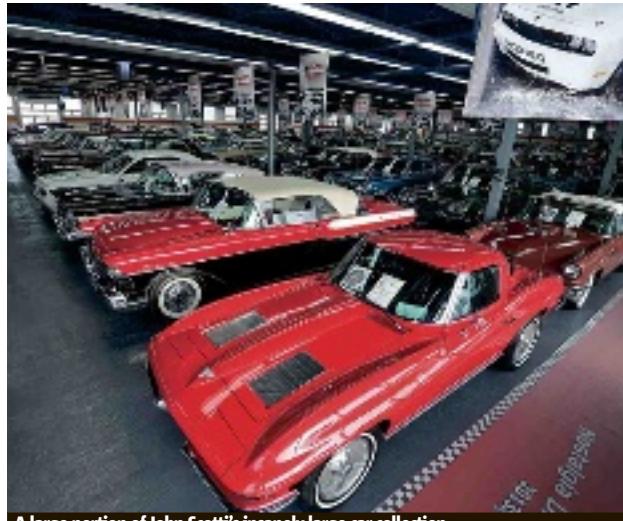

The star of the show could be the Chrysler Airflow, which should fetch $150-200k.

America's spring sale in Auburn, Ind., on May 8-10, and stands to be the largest single Canadian car collection ever sold at auction.

Some might suggest the word "collection" could be replaced with "inventory," as most of the vehicles appeared to be for sale by John Scotti Classic Cars. But Howard Cohen, who manages John Scotti Classic Cars, told us there were cars in the warehouse no one ever saw. "Some have been sitting in there for 12 years." Cohen also adds that his boss is a lifelong car enthusiast who acquired the vehicles over a period of time, and that the collection very much reflects his personal tastes.

collection. Two such examples include the 1967 Corvette Convertible with 5,500 miles, and the 1987 Buick GNX showing just 90 original miles.

The car expected to fetch the highest value under the hammer is the show-ready 1934 Chrysler Airflow, with a sales estimate of $150,000 to $200,000.

All the collection cars will be sold with "no reserve" (sometimes sellers stipulate a reserve or minimum selling amount that must be met before the vehicle can change hands).

While "no reserve" seems to introduce an element of risk, Gord Duff of Auctions America says history has shown that "no reserve" always creates more interest and attendance and buzz, and that always translates to better overall sales results.

He also noted that the John

While in an ideal world, Cohen would have preferred to sell the cars the usual "retail" way, he completely agrees with his boss's decision to make this mass sell-off. "We just had too many cars ... To be honest with you, my boss likes buying more than he does selling."

And he's at it again. "John just made another purchase — 946 cars from a 92-year old collector." For more information on the John Scotti auction check out auctionsamerica.com. You can also watch a lot of the auction live on the NBC Sports Network.

With winter over, it's time to fear the potholes

After such a harsh winter, beware of huge potholes in secondary and rural roads. PHOTO: CARSTAR

That sinking feeling.

Having eroded over the cold season, many roads are cracked and riddled with potential tire bursters and car body busters

Along with warmer weather and the first flowers, spring also brings potholes. Not only are they annoying when you're driving, but if they're large enough, they have the potential to do serious damage to your vehicle.

"It depends on how you hit it, and how fast you're going," says Teresa Kostick, owner of All Line CARSTAR Auto Body, near Chicago. "And even though you're hitting it with your front wheel first, you may have a problem with the rear wheel too, because it will go into the same pothole."

Potholes happen when water seeps through cracks in the asphalt to the ground below. When it freezes, it pushes the pavement up and also creates an indentation under it. When warmer weather arrives and the ice melts, cars driving over the asphalt break it apart, and a pothole is born.

The wheel initially takes

Take note

- Eyes peeled. Watch for puddles when the rest of the road is dry; there could be deep potholes under the water.

- Check just in case. Depending on circumstances, you may be able to make a claim to the municipality or your insurance company for pothole damage.

- Warm weather mending. Potholes can only be properly repaired when the weather is warm and dry.

"It depends on how you hit it, and how fast you're going. And even though you're hitting it with your front wheel first, you may have a problem with the rear wheel too, because it will go into the same pothole."

vehicle pulls to one side, or the steering wheel is off-centre. All of these can be safety issues, and you should get the vehicle checked as soon as possible.

Even if nothing's broken, you may still need an alignment, which should be done promptly. If you keep driving it like that, it can cause uneven tire wear. The car could also steer or brake erratically if you need to make an emergency manoeuvre.

If you see a pothole, slow down before you get to it, not when you're about to hit it. Jamming on the brakes causes your vehicle to nosedive, which can potentially cause even more damage.

"Leave enough distance between you and the vehicle ahead so you can see potholes," Kostick says. "Lower your speed, and if you can't avoid the pothole, go over it as slowly as you can."

Horoscopes

Aries

March 21 - April 20

It may at times seem as if you are moving backwards but that means you need to adjust your way of thinking. What you have to understand is that every experience moves you forward, eventually.

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

Self-confidence is the key to success, so believe in what you are doing. Remember too that the world you experience is largely a reflection of what goes on inside your head.

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

You must carry on with a creative endeavor that you may have been thinking of giving up on. You don't seem to realize how close you are to a breakthrough.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

Today's Mercury-Jupiter aspect will help you find the words to connect with those you are closest to. You don't have to get emotional but you do have to remind them that your love is unconditional.

Gemini

May 22 - June 21

You can be a bit too blunt and with Mercury, your ruler, linked to Jupiter, planet of excess, today you may say too much. So what? At least you have something worth saying.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23

You need to realize there is more going on than you were previously aware of. You need to accept that in spite of all the bad things that go on in the world, it's a wonderful place.

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

Either you will come into money today or you will come up with a plan that makes you money in the future. If it's the latter, be patient. True wealth is worth waiting for.

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

Joint plans are less likely to go wrong today if you keep any doubts you have to yourself. Yes, it's quite likely you can see a better way of doing things but, having agreed to take part in a venture, you must be positive about it.

Pisces

Feb. 20 - March 20

It's an ideal day to make promises. Mercury, planet of the mind, is on your side so decide what you desire and commit to making it yours. The universe will hear and respond favourably. SALLY BROMPTON
